- April 7, 2020: from 8pm, 14-day lockdown implemented for the Cayo District.
- April 23, 2020: the clusters that arose particularly in San Ignacio and Belize City have been contained. As a result, since about a month ago, measures to enforce social distancing, including constraints on business activity had been implemented. Most recently, when the fear of Coronavirus spread was at its height, protective bulkwalls were enhanced. It was done by way of SI No. 55 of 2020, which came into effect at midnight on Holy Saturday. In consequence of that SI, there was the imposition of a complete Sunday lockdown, public transportation was brought to a halt, Government offices were closed to the public and additional private sector businesses were shuttered. Unless extended, these extra barriers were to last until April 25th, 2020, except for the Sunday lockdown. That was to remain until April 30th, the full life of the rest of SI 55. But there will be no extension of the additional special buffers. They will, therefore, expire at midnight this Saturday. This relaxation can be mandated because of the containment of the cluster spread. Thus, in-country public transportation by land, air and sea will resume for essential workers and essential purposes. Those passengers, though, whether on bus, boat or plane will be required to wear face masks. Government offices will reopen and those additional businesses placed on total cessation can go back to operating during limited hours. As well, the special Sunday quarantine will disappear.

- After midnight on Saturday, all that will happen is that the country will go back to the state of affairs that existed immediately prior to the inclusion of the additional measures in SI S 52 of 2020. In other words, lockdown mode will still be in effect in a manner not quite as draconian as provided for by the additional special measures.
